Crosby is serving as lead counsel to The New York Times in its hotly followed copyright infringement litigation against OpenAI and Microsoft alleging that the companies illegally used millions of the Times' articles to train ChatGPT. The landmark complaint marks the first time a newspaper publisher has sued the developers of a large-language model alleging that responses to user queries are unlawfully reproducing the newspaper's content.

Earlier this year Crosby was included on Lawdragon's inaugural Top 100 Leading AI and Tech Advisors in America.
